

A brief explanation of this section.

First, this is not the true situation regarding total UK record sales of the period, but merely an assignment of the most popular versions bought for those songs where sheet music sales were popular. As an example, in November 1948 Ethel Smith was outselling every other record with her organ instrumental "The Green Cockatoo" yet no version of this song made it into the Sheet Music charts that year (it had appeared 2 years earlier for both Roberto Inglez and Mantovani), whilst in July 1948 Sam Browne was at No. 2 in the Sheet Music Charts with "Heartbreaker" with relatively small record sales.

In some cases versions appear because they were on the other side of the record where the main side was also included in the Sheet Music charts.

The early charts 1946 – May 1947 did not state chart positions. Instead the Top 10 was listed alphabetically with any song starting with the letter A appearing to beat anything starting with the letter B. Those song titles beginning with a bracket always beat everything else. In the listings in this document these early tracks are shown as position *

Myths

If you believe the rubbish that appears over and over again regarding sheet music you may be forgiven for believing that as people did not own gramophones they spent every evening at home having a sing-song around the piano. Whilst some people may have done this, most of the non-gramophonies would be more likely to be listening to the radio, chatting, reading or going out. Those who ventured to the local pub may have encountered a pub pianist who indeed would as likely as not have bought sheet music, although it is doubtful that it would be many of the Sheet Music hits of the day. After all if Mantovani and His Orchestra were at number 1 who would be singing this? There must have been an awful lot of la la la-ing. More likely the bulk of the purchases came from amateur musicians or the vast number of local Dance Bands of the era, who without the benefit of photocopiers needed to buy copies for the various members of the band. The clever major bands would write and publish their own arrangements to earn an extra buck. A way around the photocopying included purchasing a fountain pen, a bottle of indelible ink, some metholated spirits and a machine which you could feed blank sheets of paper by the turning of a handle. This involved copying the music by hand using the indelible ink, and when this came into contact with the metholated spirits in the machine allowed the ink to be copied onto another sheet of paper. The end result was not great, but it was readable.

Sheet Music Only Available

In some cases the sheet music was bought by the bands as soon as it became available. This often resulted in the song getting in the Sheet Music charts but without anybody having actually recorded it on disc. Occasionally a hit was a result of a song being popular on the radio but by artists who did not have a recording contract. Also, it wasn't unusual for an artist to be credited and their face appearing on the sheet music cover who did not have a recording of that song. An example of a delayed recording is Russ Conway's big hit "Side Saddle" from 1959 where it's popularity began on TV appearances some 3-4 weeks before he actually released the record. A more extreme example would be Patti Page's 1950 version of Tennessee Waltz where hers was the most sold Sheet Music version for most of early 1951 yet unless imported from America was unavailable on record in the UK until May 1951 when Mercury Records begin issuing records on the UK Oriole label, by which time the song's popularity was waning.

Where possible the exact Artist credits have been used with the backing Orchestra and vocalists displayed. However if the record states "conducted" or "under the direction of" this information is omitted. In some cases I have been unable to attain full details which can be frustrating for those searching out information regarding vocalists who quite often are given very little prominence in the billing, whilst most of the credit goes to the Band or Orchestra leader. Strangely the music industry seems to have reverted to this with more and more records of the 2010s giving the main credit to the Sound Engineer and merely stating "Feat. Joe Soap" and in some cases not mentioning who the singer is at all. They say "What goes round, comes around".
